Intercultural education in intercultural contexts: proposals for peace education

Culture and education play a fundamental role in the promotion of peace, as both should contribute significantly to the prevention of conflicts and the construction of more harmonious communities, willing to dialogue in order to strengthen coexistence and democracy.

Some points can be considered for this purpose: The proposal of a critical and decolonial intercultural education in indigenous contexts, which allows to advance in the hegemonic socio-cultural transformation, to move towards a formation of indigenous and non-indigenous people, from an intercultural education as a social, ethical, political and epistemological project.

We support the need for an intercultural education that recognises social and cultural diversity as a richness to build a way of seeing and understanding the world from different perspectives, promoting safe, collaborative and stimulating school communities for student learning, in a local and global perspective, based on the principles of indigenous pedagogy and education associated with experiential and emotional intelligence.

Teaching with social, cultural and territorial relevance, valuing and promoting cultural diversity to foster respect and understanding between different social groups (indigenous, non-indigenous and migrants) considering their own identities and coexistence in community spaces through the promotion of intercultural, anti-racist and critical dialogue.
