In the digital age and with the widespread use of social networks, it is undeniable that we face additional challenges in the search for peace and peaceful coexistence.

The proliferation of violence, haters and fake news on social networks has generated greater tension and polarisation in society and especially among digital youth. These manifestations of negativity and toxicity online can generate conflicts and tensions both at the interpersonal level and between communities and nations. Misinformation and extreme narratives can exacerbate divisions and hinder constructive dialogue and mutual understanding. In this context, it is essential to address these issues proactively.

There is a need to promote digital education and foster media literacy so that people can develop critical skills and discernment when consuming content online. This includes learning to identify misinformation, verify reliable sources and engage in online debates in a respectful and constructive manner. In addition, social media platforms and technology companies have an important role to play in promoting a safer and more positive environment on linea. They should implement effective policies and mechanisms to combat violence, harassment and the spread of fake news on their platforms.
