This session explores changing societal values as respect and concern for animal well-being comes to the forefront. During the Global Pandemic, the human-animal bond filled a crucial role as pets helped people to ease stress and anxiety, reduce social isolation and loneliness, and maintain physical health.

Non-profit organizations across Canada stepped into the role of helping people to help animals, and as this group united people around the common goal of animal well-being, bias was replaced by understanding and judgment transformed into compassion.

This shared experience is bringing about lasting social change by extending support to a vulnerable population and elevating the social status of animals.

These organizations continue their leadership roles as animal advocates and will share innovative models of service, focused on the human-animal bond and community engagement - extending compassion to animals and to the people who care for them.
