In Canada, the Social Sector, encompassing approximately over 180,000 Non-Profits and Charities, represents roughly 9% of the GDP, employs approximately 12% of the economically active population, and engages some 13 million volunteers. And, more than that, this sector is our social-sphere, making space to identify and effect change for new and emerging needs; to respond to crisis, to build capacity for prevention and to evolve new societal values.

In a world facing major issues related to human, animal and environmental ethics, children must be provided opportunities to develop tools to think critically about these matters.

OneKind, a new Non-Profit based in Canada, lends a conceptual framework that describes the interrelationships between animal wellness, human well-being, and the physical and social environment. We work in partnership with educators to refine and share programming. Humane education aligns closely with the concepts of 'oneness' and provides a powerful channel through which to bring theory to practice.
